Nostalgia

Composed by Lu Xiutang

Nostalgia is a masterpiece of Mr Lu Xiutang, which portrays the composer's homesickness when he was exiled to Chongqing, Sichuan, due to the fall of his hometown during the Japanese invasion of China. The music consists of an introduction and three segments: introduction Sense of Wandering, first segment Aria of the Home Mountain, second segment Humming of Hometown Song Evokes Loneliness and the third Segment Affectionately further highlights the theme of homesickness.

Lu Xiutang

Lu Xiutang (1911–1966) was an erhu musician and music educator from Yushan Town, Kunshan City, Jiangsu Province, China. After graduating from the Shanghai National Conservatory of Music, Lu Xiutang went on to pursue a career in music education and performance. His erhu playing style, defined by a sense of exquisiteness and attention to detail, won critical acclaim and earned him the nickname of "The Divine Hand of Erhu." Lu Xiutang's musical prowess was on par with Jiang Fengzhi, another erhu maestro, and they were collectively referred to as "North Jiang, South Lu." Lu Xiutang's solo masterpiece Memory of Home has become a classic, passed down through multiple generations. In addition, Lu Xiutang was the editor for teaching materials such as "Performance Techniques of Chinese Musical Instruments" and "Selected Erhu Pieces" and he also nurtured numerous outstanding erhu musicians. ## Hymn of Idleness

Composed by Liu Tianhua

Accompaniment arranged by Wu Houyuan

Hymn of Idleness is one of Maestro Liu Tianhua's top ten erhu music works. The piece was composed during the summer vacation of 1928. This music reflected an era; it also echoed the composer's sentiments. Maestro Liu was relatively comfortable in his life and pinned hope when the "National Music Improvisation Society" was set up, though faced with extreme difficulties at that time. He composed Hymn of Idleness under this ambivalence.

Farewell at Yangguan Pass

Ancient tune & arranged by Min Huifen

Accompaniment arranged by Akejian

The Song at Wei City by Wang Wei

The morning rain at Wei City dampens the light dust

The inn is green with the colours of new willows

I offer you one more cup of wine

For past West Yangguan, there will be no old friends in sight.

Farewell at Yangguan Pass was arranged by erhu master Min Huifen from a famous guqin tune of the same title. The original tune was adapted from the theme of the poem "The Song at Wei City" by Wang Wei from the Tang dynasty. It expresses the sorrow of farewell by the Chinese literati in the past. While appearing calm on the surface, their feelings were tumultuous within.

Min Huifen

Min Huifen (1945-2014) was born in Yixing, Jiangsu. She belonged to the first generation of conservatory-trained Chinese musicians since the founding of the People's Republic of China and she attained global fame and recognition. Under the guidance of Professor Lu Xiutang and Wang Yi, at the tender age of 17, she bagged the First National Erhu championship at the "Shanghai Spring Festival" competition. Since then, over the last five decades, Min's creativity and musicianship can be found in a long list of erhu works that are now considered timeless classics: Waters of Rivers, The Hongqiqu Streams around the Taihang Mountains, Three Refrains on Yangguan, Xiaoyao Pier, Baoyu Mourns, Honghu Theme Capriccio, Winter Ducks Frolicking in the Water, Symphonic Poem – Hope, Erhu Concerto: Night Thoughts, Reflections of the Moon on Erquan, Moaning in Sickness, Parting the Newlyweds, among numerous others. Deserving special mention is Min's premiere performance of the Erhu Concerto: Meditations on the Great Wall which has since been hailed as a milestone in the history of erhu's artistic development.

The narrative music depicts the past sufferings of the composer's hometown and the people's desire for freedom and joy. It portrays the optimistic and bold character of the Yubei people and expresses their love for new life and confidence in having a bright future. The composer uses western composing techniques and incorporates Henan music elements such as "Henan Zhuizi" (a form of Henan Opera) and the wind and percussion music. ### World Premiere of Strings Ensemble version

Towards A Bright Future

Composed by Liu Tianhua

rearranged by Chua Jon Lin

Towards A Bright Future is one of the representative works by Liu Tianhua, a pioneering figure in 20th-century Chinese traditional music. Composed in 1931 as a solo piece for the erhu, the title symbolises "a march toward light,” embodying a strong yearning for national renewal and social progress amid a time of darkness and turmoil. The music is marked by stirring melodies and a driving rhythm. While it adopts the stylistic framework of a Western-style march, it is deeply rooted in the idioms of Chinese musical tradition, making it a landmark example of East-West integration in modern Chinese music. This rearrangement expands the original erhu solo into a work for Chinese bowed string ensemble, preserving the resolute spirit and uplifting energy of the original, while enhancing its sense of collective movement and unified strength through rich multi-part textures. The interplay and distribution of roles across various string voices lend greater depth and dynamism to the music, making this version not only a tribute to Liu Tianhua’s musical vision, but also a reflection of how contemporary Chinese orchestral practice continues to inherit and evolve from the tradition of the past. This version was commissioned and premiered by Singapore Chinese Orchestra on 7 November 2025.

Programme Notes

By Jon Lin Chua

Chamber Charms: Virtuoso Bowed Strings is part of SCO's chamber music series. The concert opens and closes with two pieces featuring the full bowed strings section of the SCO, while the repertoire in between are erhu solo pieces featuring Concertmaster and String Section Leader Li Baoshun as well as Erhu I Principal Zhao Jianhua. All the pieces in the concert are famous erhu classics, including three pieces by Liu Tianhua.

Known as the "Father of the Erhu," Liu was a key figure in shaping the modern form of the instrument. Liu was a proponent of the progressive New Culture Movement of early twentieth-century China, which centred on the ideology of societal reform through democracy and science. Liu himself was proficient on Western instruments such as the piano and the violin and various brass instruments, and was also learned in Western music theory. Through extensive refinements to its structure and acoustics, he expanded the erhu's pitch range, standardised its tuning, and broadened its acoustic capabilities. By introducing the instrument into the formal conservatory system, which had previously been dedicated to Western instruments, he revolutionised both its repertoire and pedagogy in twentieth-century China.

Liu's well-loved learner pieces New Year's Eve Ditty (composed in 1928) and Towards a Bright Future (composed in 1932) exemplify his innovations, showcasing the erhu's extended pitch range while preserving the lyrical charm of traditional Chinese melodies and folk techniques. In this concert, however, both works are presented in new arrangements for Chinese bowed string ensemble, greatly broadening their expressive scope. Having been commissioned to write the arrangement of Towards a Bright Future for this concert, I took care to retain the character of the original piece, while enhancing it in terms of harmony, texture, and sonic range. While these Chinese string orchestral versions of these two beloved erhu classics depart from the original intent of highlighting the erhu itself, they remain deeply consistent with Liu's progressive vision of expanding the expressive possibilities of traditional Chinese music.

Liu's Hymn of Idleness (composed in 1928) is also performed on the erhu by concertmaster Li Baoshun. While not renowned for any flashy show of technical virtuosity, the work is nevertheless challenging for its sophisticated use of traditional erhu techniques. Rich in subtle melodic inflections, the piece demands refined tone and breath control, as well as deep musical sensitivity. Composed during a tranquil period in Liu's life, it evokes a poetic, transcendent state of mind and conveys a profound serenity of spirit.

Comparable in poetic depth are Lu Xiutang's Nostalgia (composed in 1936) and the ancient melody Farewell at Yangguan Pass, both performed here by Erhu I Principal Zhao Jianhua. In contrast to Hymn of Idleness, these two works convey profound sorrow, yet through a similarly restrained and poetic mode of expression. Performing them requires consummate control of tone and phrasing, coupled with acute interpretive sensitivity. Nostalgia is imbued with the smooth, lyrical cantabile quality commonly found in music of the Jiangsu region, the hometown of Lu, while this erhu version of Farewell at Yangguan Pass is based upon renowned Tang Dynasty poet Wang Wei's poem Song of Weicheng, describing a melancholic parting. It was later set to music, and gained immense popularity as a guqin piece. Characterised by gliding figures that connote the timbre and style of guqin music, the erhu arrangement of Farewell at Yangguan Pass was crafted by the late master Min Huifen, whose musical legacy continues through her disciple Zhao Jianhua.

Composed in 1958 for erhu and piano, Liu Wenjin's Ballad of Yubei is the most recent work on the program. It stands as his first major prizewinning composition, successfully combining folk music material from northern Henan (Yubei) with the formal structures and harmonies he mastered through his conservatory training. Beyond fostering instrumental innovation, twentieth-century Chinese music saw the piano become a standard collaborative instrument, a shift significantly influenced by conservatory-trained composers like Liu. The enormous popularity of his works for erhu and piano, notably Ballad of Yubei and the Sanmenxia Capriccio, was a key driver of this change and helped cement Liu Wenjin's legacy as a foundational figure in modern erhu repertoire.

In conclusion, this concert presents a living narrative of the erhu's artistic evolution. From Liu Tianhua's foundational reforms that elevated the erhu to a solo instrument capable of profound expression, to Lu Xiutang's evocative regional lyricism and Min Huifen's delicate transposition of ancient guqin aesthetics, the programme traces a century of innovation rooted in deep cultural reverence. The inclusion of Liu Wenjin's mid-century masterwork further illustrates how composers continued to expand the instrument's voice through formal sophistication and cross-genre collaboration. Whether through intimate solos or enriched ensemble arrangements, each piece resonates with Liu Tianhua's progressive vision that Chinese music could retain its soul while continually renewing its voice. Together, these works form a compelling testament to the erhu's enduring place in both China's heritage and its dynamic contemporary soundscape.

About The Orchestra

Singapore Chinese Orchestra

Founded in 1996, the Singapore Chinese Orchestra (SCO) is Singapore's only full-time professional Chinese orchestra. With more than 1.5 million music lovers every year who attend its concerts or tune in to its digital streams, it is renowned for its excellence in traditional Chinese music as well as its unique Singapore flavour. More than 80 musicians comprise the SCO, which is located at the Singapore Conference Hall in downtown Singapore. It is helmed by Principal Conductor Quek Ling Kiong, who took over the baton in 2023 from Music Director Tsung Yeh (2002-2022; named Conductor Emeritus in 2023).

SCO has impressed a broadening audience with its blockbuster presentations and is fast establishing itself around the world.

Over the years, the SCO has toured major cities in Asia and Europe, such as Beijing, Shanghai, Hong Kong, and London. Notable appearances include critically acclaimed concerts in 2007, 2018, and 2023 at the China Shanghai International Arts Festival, a 2019 performance in Gwangju, South Korea, as well as a European concert tour that year to Berlin, Prague, Forlì (Italy), and Ioannina (Greece). In 2022, its musicians travelled to Germany to perform with the Nuremberg Symphony Orchestra at Klassik Open Air, playing to more than 75,000 people.

In the spirit of cross-cultural collaboration, the SCO recorded Butterfly Lovers with Grammy Award-winning violinist Joshua Bell in 2018. The recording broke into the United Kingdom's Official Specialist Classical Chart Top 20 when it was released in 2023 – a first for a Chinese orchestra.

Besides being a National Arts flagship company, the orchestra draws on a wide range of musical influences from Singapore, Southeast Asia and beyond. MEPAAN, a production staged in conjunction with Sarawak-based creative agency The Tuiyang Initiative for the 2022 Singapore International Festival of Arts, combined stirring orchestral strains with haunting indigenous melodies. The orchestra also continues to commission original compositions, as well as arrangements of works from different genres, such as pop, jazz, Western classical music, and folk tunes of other ethnic groups.

In keeping with its standing as a "People's Orchestra", the SCO is committed to fostering a love for traditional Chinese music among the wider public. Through extensive education and outreach programmes, including community concerts, workshops, and competitions, it nurtures the next generation of musicians and listeners. The Caring Series, launched in 2007, has brought the healing power of music to people in hospitals, hospices, and elderly homes. The orchestra's musicians also perform regularly at schools, and work closely with the Singapore National Youth Chinese Orchestra (SNYCO).

The SCO has published several books on its history and outstanding musicians. The People's Orchestra (2016) looks back on the ensemble's first two decades as a professional orchestra, and SCO Hidden Gems was released in 2021 to mark its 25th anniversary. That same year, the orchestra launched a Digital Archival Portal, a repository of house programmes, music scores, recordings and more, which will support academic research.

Through these efforts, the SCO continues to further its mission as a top Chinese orchestra that will inspire and inform generations of music lovers for decades to come.
